MILITARY ORGANISATION. It was in war, more especially, that the nascent kingdom of Israel inaugurated a new era, essentially different from earlier times. The strong force which David had got together at Adullam and at Ziklag became the nucleus of an excellent permanent army, which enjoyed, in its time, supremacy through all the south of Syria. Up to that time, Israel had been exposed to perpetual attacks from its neighbours, and had always proved itself inferior to the Philistines. Now, the Philistines are about to be subdued, and the neighbouring peoples made tributary. Israel is about to form a regular kingdom, dwelling in safety behind its frontiers, and for a time exercising dominion over neighbouring states. What had characterised the epoch of the Judges, and had led to the defeats of Israel, were the want of precaution and the inferiority of arms. David made an ample provision of weapons of defence, which were stored in the citadel of Jerusalem. Song of Solomon, ch. iv. v. 4. Up to that time, the gibbon had owned his own arms, which, in consequence, were often of inferior quality or badly cared for. The man of war was now equipped by the King, and those innumerable episodes where the Philistine, with a strong helmet, a long lance, and perfected cuirass, mocked at the Israelite, armed with nothing but a sling or a short sword did not again occur. An army, in ancient times, could nearly always...
